Why Purba Burdwan (West Bengal)

is an ideal destination to participate by the exhibitors?

Rice production in West Bengal is spread across three major seasons—Aus, Aman, and Boro. Among these, the Kharif crops (Aus and Aman) account for nearly 70% of the state's total rice production.

Purba Burdwan is one of the rice and grain trade centers in West Bengal and plays a vital role in the state's agricultural economy. A significant portion of the area under rice cultivation falls within high and medium productivity zones, contributing substantially to overall production. West Bengal produces over 150 lakh tonnes of rice annually, making it one of the leading rice-producing states in India. Eastern India holds immense potential in rice production and is often regarded as the emerging "Rice Bowl of India." The region contributes more than 50% of the total area under rice cultivation in the country, supported by abundant natural resources such as fertile land, water availability, and favorable climatic conditions.

Purba Burdwan is a key processing hub where large volumes of paddy are converted into consumable rice. The district and surrounding regions are home to a large number of modern and semi-modern rice mills, including both high-capacity and small-scale units. West Bengal alone has over 2,000 rice mills, while the broader eastern and northeastern region—including Bihar, Jharkhand, Odisha, and Assam—accounts for more than 6,000 milling units. This exhibition will serve as a technology-driven platform for millers across East and North-East India. It will provide machinery manufacturers with an opportunity to connect directly with end users, while enabling millers to experience the latest global technologies at their doorstep. Neighboring states also contribute significantly to paddy production, with Odisha, Bihar, Jharkhand, and Assam collectively adding substantial volumes to the region's output.

Today, rice millers across the region are increasingly looking to upgrade their operations with advanced and efficient technologies. This forthcoming International Rice Grain Pro-Tech Expo will offer an ideal platform for manufacturers to showcase their latest machinery, bridge the technology gap, and strengthen the processing and supply chain ecosystem. Our exhibition in Purba Burdwan aims to unlock the vast potential of the eastern rice industry and provide a comprehensive business platform for grain milling machinery manufacturers and allied industries from India and abroad. It will be a unique opportunity to explore one of the most promising rice markets in the country.
